And the small print:

Douglas brings more than 30 years professional and business experience to his coaching practice. Formerly a partner of “magic circle” law firm, Clifford Chance, where he held a number of leadership and management positions, he is now pursuing a “portfolio” of business, charitable and other activities.

He trained as an executive coach with Meyler Campbell (the business coach programme) and Ashridge Business School (coaching for organisational consultants). His understanding of, and empathy with, the kind of challenges his clients are facing allows him to focus on – and particularly enjoy - working with high achieving professionals at transition points in their careers.

Douglas has an MA in jurisprudence from Oxford University. He is a solicitor and chartered tax adviser.
